10-9-2014

The Santa Clara, 2014-10-09

Santa Clara University

Follow this and additional works at: http://scholarcommons.scu.edu/tsc

Part of the Arts and Humanities Commons, Business Commons, Education Commons, Engineering Commons, Law Commons, Life Sciences Commons, Medicine and Health Sciences Commons, Physical Sciences and Mathematics Commons, and the Social and Behavioral Sciences Commons

Recommended Citation

http://scholarcommons.scu.edu/tsc/6

This Book is brought to you for free and open access by the SCU Publications at Scholar Commons. It has been accepted for inclusion in The Santa Clara by an authorized administrator of Scholar Commons. For more information, please contact rscroggin@scu.edu.
 Cornel West Sparks Dialogue

Recognized celebrity speaks on racism, education, politics

John Flynn THE SANTA CLARA

Cornel West spoke at two Santa Clara events and captivated audiences with his graciousness and intensity while he offered raw opinions on the problems within American society.

West visited campus Oct. 3 to discuss his book, "Black Prophetic Fire," which seeks to humanize the "deodorized" versions of important black civil rights leaders. In addition, he spoke on topics such as education, racial

Netflix Invades Privacy, Pays Out

Ethics center and law school receive hefty sum in federal case

Naushaba Kahn THE SANTA CLARA

Two Santa Clara hubs for Internet ethics have been named as recipients of a portion of $9 million—settlement from a class-action lawsuit brought against Netflix.

Santa Clara's Markkula Center for Applied Ethics and the School of Law's High Tech Law Institute were granted approximately $176,000 each in the settlement after lawyer to many tech

"Yes Means Yes" Already in Place

University years ahead of state law, still faces problems with sexual assault

Vishakha Joshi THE SANTA CLARA

On the east coast, Columbia University student Emma Sulkowitz is carrying a mattress around campus every day until her alleged rapist is expelled. On the west coast, Gov. Jerry Brown passed a law last week requiring all California universities to incorporate a policy of "affirmative consent" in sexual assault cases or risk losing state funding.

Santa Clara remains ahead of the curve. The university has had an affirmative consent policy in place for several years. However, federal regulations hinder Santa Clara's ability to clearly report sexual assaults that occur on and off campus. Like most universities, Santa Clara also faces the problem of underreported sexual assaults, which could be due to social stigma or the intensive reporting process itself.

The new "Yes Means Yes" law calls for universities to explicitly define consent as a voluntary agreement rather than passive silence or a lack of resistance. According to the legislation, someone who is incapacitated or unconscious is unable to consent to sex. Santa Clara's sexual misconduct policy follows this state requirement to a tee.

For more than a decade, we've been doing what this law is intending," said Philip Beltran, director of Campus Safety Services.

Discrepancies in Data

Last week, Santa Clara released its 2014 Annual Security and Fire Safety Report — which named the number of sexual offenses that occurred from 2011 to 2013 — in accordance with the Clery Act, a federal statute requiring universities to log crime statistics.

According to the statistics, there were 0 reports of forcible sex offenses in 2011, 1 in 2012 and 7 in 2013.

"There has been an increase in the number of reports, and I attribute that to an increase in the education that we're doing on the topic," said Matthew Duncan, associate dean for student life.

"More people are being informed on what constitutes sexual misconduct. Now more people are coming forward and reporting the incidents."

The Clery Act creates universal categories to analyze sexual offenses on college campuses across the nation. However, some members of the Santa Clara community say that the figures under the Clery Act may not be an accurate representation of the amount of sexual violence that students experience.

"To me, those numbers were shockingly low," said Libby Furfow, assistant resident director at Graham Hall.

These figures may be due to the number of
2. Three win Nobel in chemistry for super-accurate microscopes:

Three researchers won a Nobel Prize on Wednesday for developing microscopes that send light through tissue with near-perfect resolution, allowing scientists to zoom into living cells with unprecedented detail to seek the roots of diseases.

The chemistry prize was awarded to Americans Eric Betzig, William Moerner and German scientist Stefan Hell.

They found ways to use molecules that glow on demand to see structures "previously thought possible, letting scientists peer into living cells with unprecedented detail to seek the roots of disease.

The research has allowed scientists to study illnesses such as Parkinson's disease and Huntington's disease at a molecular level, the Royal Swedish Academy of Sciences said.

Alcohol Related Medical Emergency

10/4: An intoxicated student was observed unconscious on the gravel trail by the entrance to the Santa Clara softball field. SCU EMS was contacted and responded to evaluate the student. He was escorted back to his home by a friend.

10/5: An intoxicated female student was found lying on the lawn area near Acolt Way. SCU EMS and SCPD were contacted and responded. The student was transported to Good Samaritan Hospital by paramedics.

10/6: A non-affiliate male was reported lying unconscious on the sidewalk in front of the Sohroto Hall parking lot. CSS, SCU EMS, SCPD and SCPD responded. He was determined to be well enough to leave on his own.

Drug Violation

10/5: CSS responded to a resident’s room to investigate a report of a marijuana odor. The resident denied having smoked or being in possession of marijuana in his room. A marijuana grinder and numerous empty marijuana dispensary containers were found during a room search. A prescription bottle containing marijuana buds was also found in his room. All items that were found were confiscated from the resident’s room and disposed of.

L. Nurse in Spain gets Ebola, raising global concern:

In a case under-scoring the peril of caring for Ebola patients, a nurse in Spain has come down with the disease.

This is the first time someone has caught the disease outside West Africa during the current epidemic.

The nurse’s illness illustrates the danger that health care workers face not only in poorly equipped West African clinics, but also in the more sophisticated medical centers of Europe and the United States, said Dr. William Schaffner, an infectious disease expert at Vanderbilt University.

“Among all Ebola outbreaks, health care workers are at the greatest risk,” he said.

The development came Monday as another American sick with the disease arrived back in the U.S. for treatment.

President Barack Obama said the government was considering ordering more careful screening of airline passengers traveling from the outbreak region.

The unprecedented Ebola outbreak this year has killed more than 3,400 people in West Africa.

From AP Reports.

CAMPUS SAFETY

Found Property

10/3: A toy bear was found by the Mission Church walkway. The owner was notified.

Informational Report

10/5: A campus resident’s parent requested CSS assistance in locating her son, who was not in his room and had not been seen since the night before. She also notified SCPD for a missing person report. On Oct. 6, CSS was notified that the resident was located by his parent at El Camino Hospital.

Obscene Phone Call

10/2: A faculty member reported receiving an obscene phone call from an unknown male on her office phone. CSS documented the incident.

Reckless Driving

10/6: CSS received calls regarding a crash and the smell of gas outside of Swig and Dunny Halls. CSS responded to the area to investigate. After following a gas trail on the roadway, a vehicle was discovered on Franklin Street in front of the Music and Dance Building. The driver was observed attempting to restart his vehicle. SCPD contacted and responded. The driver was taken into custody for DUI and a felony hit-and-run.

Student Behavior

10/6: Two students were observed tampering with construction materials outside of Benson Memorial Center. The students were identified.

Suspicous Incident

10/2: A transient male was reported looking for food inside a refrigerator in Daly Science Center. CSS responded and was able to locate him in front of the men’s bathroom and the Dance Building. He refused to answer any questions and left campus without further incident.

Trespassing

10/6: Several individuals were observed drinking alcoholic beverages by the Benson Memorial Center fountain. SCPD was contacted and responded. They were identified as non-affiliates from the United Kingdom. They were admonished for trespassing and escorted off campus.

From Campus Safety reports. Email news@thesantaclara.org.

Check out the Campus Safety Report online:

facebook.com/sscucss
@SCUCampusSafety
University still has not taken a stance on proposed city policy

Nicolaus Sonnenburg
THE SANTA CLARA

Santa Clara’s Associated Student Government held a public forum Wednesday night to answer any questions and quell student fears and anxieties about a proposed city ordinance.

If passed, the current draft of a housing ordinance authored by a city committee would require property owners to apply for boarding house permits allowing them to rent single family homes to groups of five or more adults paying rent separately.

Sections in the bill, such as the “unruly gatherings” clause, would give the Santa Clara City Council the power to revoke these boarding house permits for repeat offenses such as the hosting of parties and poorly maintained landscaping.

The panel answered student questions about the proposed housing ordinance, and consisted of Michael Hindery, vice president of finance and administration; Jeanne Rosenberger, vice provost for student life and dean of students; and Kim Gilkey-Wall, assistant dean for off-campus student life.

During the meeting, Hindery said that students should not worry about the impact this ordinance may have on the current academic year. The members of the panel said the earliest that city council could even consider a final draft of the ordinance would be January. Implementation would take months after that.

“The existing status quo will not change,” said Hindery. “Students living off campus should not be concerned about having to find new housing this year.”

When an audience member asked Hindery if the Santa Clara administration supported or opposed the proposed ordinance, Hindery said it is difficult to take a stance on a document that has changed so much and is still subject to future change.

Despite this, he said that Santa Clara has been an active member in the citywide dialogues about the measure. Hindery said that talks with the city have resulted in changes to the wording of the ordinance, such as the removal of many of the references to fraternities and sororities.

Much of the conversation surrounded the issue of relations between student and resident of the community at large. Gilkey-Wall and Rosenberger encouraged students to meet their neighbors, exchange phone numbers and open smaller scale dialogues about creating a neighborhood conducive to the interest of both student and family resident interests.

The panelists also explained benefits the bill could provide to the student body. Hindery explained that the proposed ordinance enforces the “status quo.” Many of the homes are currently in violation of city ordinance.

The proposed bill would provide an effective amnesty for those homes. Gilkey-Wall pointed out that the permits outlined in the ordinance would put more pressure on landlords to be accountable, an issue that students have protested about for years.

Senior Dalan Angelo, speaking for a group of concerned students, also voiced his opinion about the importance of voter registration and participation in local politics.

Contact Nicolaus Sonnenburg at nsonnenburg@scu.edu or call (408) 554-4852.

Privacy Programs Funded

Continued from Page 1

The Internet ethics program hosts events such as the IT, Ethics and Law lecture series, co-sponsored by the High Tech Law Institute, which teaches students about privacy ethics.

“Many of our materials are specifically directed at undergraduate students, whom some researchers have deemed as ‘consumers who are most likely to engage in risky electronic behavior,’” said Raicu.

This will not the first time that Santa Clara has received settlement money from a class-action lawsuit. According to Schulman, the center received $500,000 from a Google settlement in 2011.

Schulman said the money funded several programs on privacy, including an online application for undergraduates, which teaches about privacy ethics. According to Raicu, the money from the Netflix settlement should be distributed to the university within the next month or so.

Contact Naushaba Khan at nakhan@scu.edu.

Assault Policy Evaluated

Continued from Page 1

students that live off-campus, according to Duncan.

Incidents occurring on properties not owned or controlled by the university are not reflected in the Clery figures.

“As a matter of fact, there have been instances where the Department of Education has taken issue when universities have included that information because the law very specifically says these are the categories and we want to (be) consistent when reported across universities across the nation,” Duncan said. That doesn’t re- flect all of the numbers for a given year.

When accounting for off-campus sexual assault reports, the number of sexual assaults increases.

The Office of Student Life logged 5 reports of sexual assaults in 2012, 8 in 2013 and 13 so far in 2014. Unlike the data under the Clery Act, this data includes reports of sexual assaults at off-campus residences and only pertains to reports involving Santa Clara students.

Underreporting: A National Concern

Underreporting of sexual assaults is a nationwide epidemic, one to which Santa Clara is not immune.

“Sexual assault happens here,” said junior Jennie Robinson, program coordinator of Feminists for Justice, a campus organization that aims to empower women.

“Personally, I know three girls who have been sexually assaulted. One of them reported it.”

Santa Clara provides an extensive support system for students who experience sexual assault, including advocates for sexual assault survivors, a readily available sexual misconduct policy and resources from Counseling and Psychological Services.

Though this system is necessary to properly evaluate and handle sexual assault reports, the process can be discouraging for a recent victim.

Robinson said her friend who had been sexually assaulted had to speak with her community facilitator, the Office of Student Life and a police officer on three separate occasions to report the incident.

“Three rounds of her having to tell her story and being forced to go through that feeling again,” Robinson said. “Just talking about it made her very emotional and I can’t imagine how hard it was for her.”

Once cases are reported, even fewer are pursued in court.

Last week, Campus Safety Services reported two instances of campus resi- dents who had been sexually assaulted. Neither victims chose to file charges against their perpetrators.

The stigma associated with being a victim of sexual assault is another possible cause of underreporting on college campuses, students also said.

“People don’t want this to be a pub- lic thing,” said Furrow. “For some peo- ple, you’re met with blame, especially if you personally knew your attacker beforehand.”

According to Assistant Women’s studies, students may feel less inclined to report assaults if they are fearful that their actions may be scrutinized, such as if they were drinking or at a party.

However, she said the new Califor- nia law may be helpful in addressing this stigma on a statewide scale.

“No individual single thing is going to be a miracle cure for this problem,” said Loehia. “But it’s a first step toward shifting the discourse around this issue in a way that might be meaningful.”

Contact Vishraba Joshi at vjoshi@ scu.edu or call (408) 554-4894.
Red Bull Concert Brings Energy to San Francisco

Musical groups compete for crowd affection

John Flynn
THE SANTA CLARA

Four electronic artists with varying styles competed for cheers of fans at San Francisco’s Regency Ballroom on Oct. 1.

Radio legend Sway Calloway hosted the first annual Red Bull Music Academy Culture Clash, which started internationally recognized San Francisco-based artists - Dirtybird, Triple Threat DJs, Tormenta Tropical and Dub Mission.

The audience cheers determined the winner. Combined with the custom sound systems of each performing artist, the night was pleasingly deafening.

Performance and response tracks were, as Red Bull put it, “explosively encouraged,” and each group was given four rounds to showcase their musical prowess. With the rules set, the event commenced.

Dub Mission, a reggae-infused group, boasted heavy baselines, a megaphone-toting front man and a live three-hour accompaniment. Their finest moment came during a live sampling of the luscious horns from Outkast’s slow jam tour-de-force “Spotlitie Dopeaisious.”

They also brought out Bay Area legends, Luni, for a rendition of their classic hit, “I Got 5 On It,” which sent the crowd booing down memory lane.

Tormenta Tropical followed with a set of pure energy. Among their ranks was a stone-faced twerker, an exceptionally easy, blue-haired diva and a muscular Jamaican singer with a strangely high-pitched voice.

Despite being the weakest group, they provided a highlight of the night by tossing fried chicken from buckets into the crowd to a bombastic styling of “I Like to Move It.”

Next on stage was Triple Threat DJs — three DJs with a classic education of the turntables. As Leon from “Curb Your Enthusiasm” would say, “They brought the ruckus.”

Backed by a large contingent of towel-waving fanatics, they slammed the crowd with juicy basslines. Triple Threat showcased their versatility by crafting tunes in the styles of their competitors. Encircling the crowd with their boldness, they twisted hits like “Trophies” and “Move B’tch” in their appeal for the championship.

Finally, there was Dirtybird, captained by a bearded Buddha. They brought a tremendous amount of star power.

Tore Short came to conduct the crowd with his mega-hit “Blow the Whistle.” Then, super-trio Major Lazer, Diplo’s protege, materialized and dropped their omnipresent, super-salsa horn sampling “Watch Out For This,” which sent the audience into hysterics.

Then, like mythic gods, the glinting gold and silver helmets of Daft Punk emerged from the fog that hung in the air and the duo played “Get Lucky.” The hive mind of the audience was lost.

Dirtybird concluded their final set and was met with chants of their name reverberating off the walls of the packed ballroom.

“It was exciting to go to a concert where you didn’t know what artists you were going to see,” said junior Courtney Griffin.

In a surprise upset, Triple Threat DJs took the title. The trio provided a rumbling outro for the sweaty, satisfied audience filing out into the warm San Francisco night.

While exiting, a white-haired woman, the mother-in-law of Dub Mission’s female DJ, stood out among her fellow audience members. When asked if she had ever been to a show like this before she replied, “Not since the ‘60s.”

Contact John Flynn at jfflynn@scu.edu or call (408) 554-4852.

Activist Engages

Continued from Page 1

injustice and American politics. He hopes his book and future leaders will tell the truth, expose lies and challenge the discourse.

“Justice is what love looks like in public,” said West, a professor at Union Theological Seminary. “Love is a matter of keeping track of another person’s humanity.”

West has taught at Yale University, Harvard University and Princeton University for over 30 years.

We must recognize we are who we are, unloved, unnecessary, superfluous. We must recognize we are who we are because someone loved us.”

Political commentator Cornel West passionately answers questions from students and staff Friday during an intimate discussion.

West brought his insights to Santa Clara students on topics such as education, race, politics and what they mean to our society.

“Until all the members of our community feel valued and respected, we have work to do,” said Billingslea.

We must recognize we are who we are because someone loved us.”

Contact John Flynn at jfflynn@scu.edu or call (408) 554-4852.

Activist Engages

Continued from Page 1

injustice and American politics. He hopes his book and future leaders will tell the truth, expose lies and challenge the discourse.

“Justice is what love looks like in public,” said West, a professor at Union Theological Seminary. “Love is a matter of keeping track of another person’s humanity.”

West has taught at Yale University, Harvard University and Princeton University for over 30 years.

We must recognize we are who we are, unloved, unnecessary, superfluous. We must recognize we are who we are because someone loved us.”

Political commentator Cornel West passionately answers questions from students and staff Friday during an intimate discussion.

West brought his insights to Santa Clara students on topics such as education, race, politics and what they mean to our society.

“Until all the members of our community feel valued and respected, we have work to do,” said Billingslea.

We must recognize we are who we are because someone loved us.”

Contact John Flynn at jfflynn@scu.edu or call (408) 554-4852.
Santa Clara Student Crashes Fashion Week

Christina Hoang
Associate Reporter

Santa Clara upperclassmen told me to study abroad. They didn’t explain why — they just said I had to. Studying abroad in Paris, the international fashion capital, soon became one of my college goals.

Fast forward to late September, I was in Paris and Fashion Week had started. Editors, bloggers and celebrities had flown in for the events. I didn’t have any invitations or industry connections, but I figured I would try to attend anyway.

On the Tuesday, I arrived early to the Junko Shimada show. Shimada has been in the Parisian fashion scene since the 1960s. Two men in black suits guarded the door. In French, I asked, “Hello sir, I’m a journalism student from Santa Clara in California. Do you know if there’s any invitations?”

They didn’t understand, but told me to use the other entrance. I walked in, rehearsing the question in my head. Before I could think I heard “Fardon!” from two people trying to walk out the door. I moved aside. A photographer instructed me, “Turn right. Yes.”

Then it hit me — I was backstage.

My heart raced as I scanned the small room. Camera lights flashed at models. Behind the makeup artists, tables were stocked with beauty products. On the left side, assistants hung up the designs on a silver rack. People reached behind for pieces of equipment.

After a couple of minutes, a woman asked me who I was. This was it. I told her I wrote for The Santa Clara in California, and her face lit up. I proceeded to take photos around the set. Later, we entered the stage. Unlike typical catwalks, the room was dark with no chairs. Designs hung amid a chandelier made of glass sardines. Turquoise lights swirled around on the floor. It felt like I was in a secret cave, not a runway.

People’s shivering mixed with the soundtrack of howling winds and tinkling wind chimes. In an instant, the tower lit up. The first model appeared in a bright, red skirt with cutout mermaid scales. Her skin glistened under the fluorescent lights. The people in the room held their breath, frozen in the moment.

One after the other, the models circled the tower like dolls in the Nutcracker ballet. There were shorts, jackets and dresses made of transparent nylon and tiny pearls strategically placed on bolero sets. As the color palette darkened, it was as if the room submerged deeper underwater, until the submarine spectacle sank to the ocean floor. This was “World of Silence,” Junko Shimada’s Spring-Summer 2015 collection. Finally, long silhouettes featuring a red octopus print ended the catwalk.

Shimada, beaming like a bride, came out to a roaring applause. When asked what her inspiration was, she said, “I love the story of ‘20,000 Leagues Under the Sea.’ Everything I imagined in my head — the strange fish scales, the strange creatures — they’re all strange, no?”

The event gave me greater clarity for my career path. I experienced a day in the life of a journalist. Before that day, I never would’ve thought I’d be reporting on Fashion Week.

I now understand the advice I was given when I first attended Santa Clara and it is my duty to tell you: Study abroad. You won’t regret it.

Contact Christina Hoang atachoang@scu.edu.
Cash-Strapped Teachers Highlight Broken System

Eduardo Cuevas

Given the fact that the average American teacher makes less money than top Santa Cruz garbage collectors, Walter White from AMC’s hit show “Breaking Bad” probably isn’t the only teacher looking for a new career.

In his film “Annie Hall,” Woody Allen famously declares “Those who can’t do, teach. And those who can’t teach, teach gym.”

Albeit, teaching gym is easier than teaching, say, calculus, but the notion of teachers as incompetent is utterly false.

Teachers shape youth and prepare them for their inevitable immersion into society. Their purpose is to create a functioning community of people who coexist and make decisions to further the country’s progress.

A report by Pearson Education in May 2014 ranked the United States’ education system as 14th in the world, right behind Russia. We must change the social status of teachers to enforce American strength both domestically and internationally.

The stigma against the profession, I believe, correlates to its desirability. Think about when someone says they want to be a teacher—most people grimace.

The next question for the aspiring teacher is something like, “Isn’t there something else you want to do?” or “Really, just teach? What about being a professor?”

What they fail to realize is while professors provide research and enlightenment for already gifted students, they do not directly address the needs of the greater American people: the ones who don’t choose college but enter the workforce instead.

How are they supposed to function without a solid education?

Certain aspects of the teaching profession could be acting as a major deterrent to potential candidates. The pay is horrible. The average salary for teachers with over 15 years of experience at primary, early-secondary and upper-secondary schools in the United States is a little over $47,000, according to Bloomberg News.

The Bloomberg report also ranks teachers’ annual salaries worldwide. The United States ranks 12th, while leading Luxembourg pays almost $98,000 per year.

With increasing student debt and cost of living rising in certain areas, why would someone even want to be an American teacher?

Woody Allen’s words reverberate as we realize how underpaid they are. But remember, a teacher’s salary seems to be saying something more than just placing those who cannot do into an undesirable profession.

It’s a social implication. Regardless of how salaries determine our country’s view of teachers, they are central to a functioning society. They shape all members of the country in some form or another. To discount that—as we have—shows a lack of understanding.

The pay of teachers reflects their supposed weight in society.

In other words, we value them so marginally that teachers with 15 years of experience earn less than the top 10 percent of garbage collectors in Santa Cruz (by about $3,000). Not to discount the importance of a garbage collector, but you don’t need a college degree or teaching credentials to pick up trash. More importantly, you are not preparing people to vote, pay taxes and enter the American workforce.

So to say that those who can’t do, teach, is to undermine the progress of the United States. To degrade teachers through salary further deters people from actually preparing able-bodied individuals to participate in our country. They pave the way for the future and ensure we do not have uneducated constituents or stagnate innovators.

Eduardo Cuevas is a junior English major.

Unlimited Vacation in an Unemployment Office?

Thomas Curran-Levett

S tr Richard Branson, the founder of the Virgin Group, is the news once more, this time regarding an issue that could see Santa Clara students tossing sunscreen into backpacks and dusting off their passports.

In his new book “The Virgin Way,” Branson unveiled a system in which employees can take unlimited time off from work without approval whenever they please. This plan mirrors the policies of other companies like Netflix and could revolutionize the way people schedule their vacations from work.

However, before you start updating your LinkedIn profile and bombarding the Virgin Group recruiters with your resume, take into account that this new policy may not be as spectacular as it seems.

While proponents of the policy such as David Muzyj, president and CEO at Windsor Regional Hospital in Ontario, which operated under the system for three years, vehemently tout its benefits, others remain hesitant.

Supporters, including Muzyj, claim the plan promotes better rest and increased morale for employees, as well as heightened worker responsibility and teamwork. Others remain hesitant.

The main argument against Branson’s policy stems from the timeless adage that quality always comes before quantity. Simply put, unlimited vacations sound great in theory, always comes before quantity. Simply put, unlimited vacations sound great in theory, but in practice it is quite possible that this policy will make the worry-free and relaxing vacations of the past anything but that.

Branson noted that unlimited vacation can only be taken “when (workers) feel 100 percent comfortable that they and their team are up to date on every project and that their absence will not in any way damage the business—or, for that matter, their careers.”

Ideally this would not be an issue, as people in a workplace setting should be responsible enough to get their work done before jetting off to the Bahamas on Virgin Airlines (alright, so Branson’s new policy isn’t entirely selfless). Yet, as anyone who has ever been left to the majority of the work on a group project can attest, this is quite frequently not the case.

This new policy could create a chaotic bull rush out the door of major workplaces, which can all but forget about being open for the holidays.

On the other hand, employees may be wary to take vacations whenever they see fit, fearing that their definition of giving it “100 percent” may differ greatly from the definition of their employers. It is relatively hard to enjoy a tense vacation spent worrying about job security.

This notion was recently echoed by engineer Scott Francis, who previously worked for a company that enabled unlimited vacation time. His main complaint regarding the policy, which he raised during an interview with Tracey Samuelson of Marketplace, was the unease caused by his “feeling like it was going to reflect negatively on me if I took vacation that wasn’t owed to me.”

At its best, unlimited vacation improves the overall well-being of both the workplace and workers themselves. If implemented incorrectly with irresponsible staffs and workplaces, it could descend into chaotic free-for-alls with no one showing up to work on Mondays and Fridays. For this reason, all eyes will turn to the Virgin Group and others who implement this policy.

Ultimately, if Richard Branson gives his employees free airfare along with their unlimited vacations, all I can say is this: The policy is horrible. Don’t apply to the Virgin Group, and tell all of your friends and other acquaintances not to apply either.

If I am not writing for the newspaper next quarter, it is because my application was successful and I am too busy vacationing from my new job with Virgin.

Thomas Curran-Levett is a junior political science major and the editor of the Opinion section.

Articles in the Opinion section represent the views of the individual authors only and not the views of The Santa Clara or Santa Clara University.
Women's Soccer

Santa Clara @ San Francisco	 Sun. 10/12	 1:00 p.m.

Women's Volleyball

Men's Soccer

Women's Water Polo

The Broncos are now 8-5-0 overall and 1-1-0 in WCC play on the season. The Broncos will look to redeem themselves this Friday, Oct. 10, when they travel to Cal Baptist. The game is set to start at 9:30 p.m.

Contact Nick Redfield at nredfield@scu.edu.

ATHLETE OF THE WEEK

Steve Eneme
Men's Soccer

Eneme scored a goal versus West Coast Conference opponent University of San Diego in a losing effort. The score was 2-1.

What music do you listen to before a game?
I usually don't. I try to calm down and get in the zone. Music does the trick.

Do you have a favorite pregame meal or snack?
I don't usually eat before games. I just do what feels right. A balanced meal but nothing too heavy. I try to keep it simple. Sometimes I'll eat something to keep me going, like a banana or a protein bar.

Before games, I enjoy a well-balanced meal or snack. Does the trick.

What does a typical game day look like for you?
I usually get to the gym a little bit early to get a warm-up in before the game. I try to stay focused and prepared. What music do you listen to before a game?
I usually don't. I try to calm down and get in the zone. Music does the trick.

Do you have a favorite pregame meal or snack? Yes, I do. I like to eat something light and easy. A banana or a granola bar usually works for me.

Before games, I enjoy a well-balanced meal or snack. Does the trick.

What does a typical game day look like for you?
I usually get to the gym a little bit early to get a warm-up in before the game. I try to stay focused and prepared. What music do you listen to before a game?
I usually don't. I try to calm down and get in the zone. Music does the trick.

Do you have a favorite pregame meal or snack? Yes, I do. I like to eat something light and easy. A banana or a granola bar usually works for me.

Before games, I enjoy a well-balanced meal or snack. Does the trick.

What does a typical game day look like for you?
I usually get to the gym a little bit early to get a warm-up in before the game. I try to stay focused and prepared. What music do you listen to before a game?
I usually don't. I try to calm down and get in the zone. Music does the trick.

Do you have a favorite pregame meal or snack? Yes, I do. I like to eat something light and easy. A banana or a granola bar usually works for me.

Before games, I enjoy a well-balanced meal or snack. Does the trick.

What does a typical game day look like for you?
I usually get to the gym a little bit early to get a warm-up in before the game. I try to stay focused and prepared. What music do you listen to before a game?
I usually don't. I try to calm down and get in the zone. Music does the trick.

Do you have a favorite pregame meal or snack? Yes, I do. I like to eat something light and easy. A banana or a granola bar usually works for me.

Before games, I enjoy a well-balanced meal or snack. Does the trick.

What does a typical game day look like for you?
I usually get to the gym a little bit early to get a warm-up in before the game. I try to stay focused and prepared. What music do you listen to before a game?
I usually don't. I try to calm down and get in the zone. Music does the trick.

Do you have a favorite pregame meal or snack? Yes, I do. I like to eat something light and easy. A banana or a granola bar usually works for me.

Before games, I enjoy a well-balanced meal or snack. Does the trick.

What does a typical game day look like for you?
I usually get to the gym a little bit early to get a warm-up in before the game. I try to stay focused and prepared. What music do you listen to before a game?
I usually don't. I try to calm down and get in the zone. Music does the trick.

Do you have a favorite pregame meal or snack? Yes, I do. I like to eat something light and easy. A banana or a granola bar usually works for me.

Before games, I enjoy a well-balanced meal or snack. Does the trick.

What does a typical game day look like for you?
Giants Move On in October

Nobody thought the San Francisco Giants would win their Division Series matchup against the Washington Nationals. By nobody, I mean the “experts.” ESPN predictions almost unanimously favored the Nationals to win the series, even after the Giants’ Game 1 win. If you looked at almost every website before the series, including ESPN and Bleacher Report’s “expert” opinions, you would see the Washington “W” logo across the board for their picks to win.

Washington had the best record in the National League coming into the series against San Francisco at 96-66. Despite having the record and the expert picks, they fell to the Giants’ postseason magic.

The Giants took the Nats out in four games, 3-1, in the best-of-five series. San Francisco took Game 1 behind Jake Peavy’s first postseason win in a spectacular performance. He carried the Giants into the fifth inning before being pulled.

Brandon Belt was the hero of Game 2 with a home run in the 18th inning, showing the team’s grit and determination in the playoffs. The Giants just refused to give up, and that is why they’ve won two World Series in four years.

Washington stayed alive, winning Game 3 because of Doug Fister’s seven shutout innings. Bryce Harper sealed the win with a homer in the ninth and suddenly, Giants’ fans were starting to sweat.

But in Game 4, the Giants showed the same toughness that delivered two World Series to the Bay Area. The Giants went up 2-0 in the second inning but the Nationals came roaring back in the fifth and seventh innings to tie the game. Orange and black fans were starting to sweat again; the powder was starting to get low. And won the next three 25-19, 25-23 and 25-23 again.

Head Coach Jon Wallace was pleased with Saturday’s outcome and noted the significance of an away victory.

“The game against BYU was a little tough — they’re a really good team and it’s always hard to play in their gym,” he said. Santa Clara faces two conference opponents at home this week — University of Portland on Thursday and Gonzaga University on Friday.

Junior forward Alfred “Ali” Edmonds gathers the ball against the University of San Diego. The Broncos would go on to lose 2-1 in their game versus the Toreros on Sunday after tying the third place Loyola Marymount Lions 1-1 on Friday.

ESPN and Bleacher Report’s “expert” website before the series, including "experts". Nobody, I mean the “experts.”

Junior Daniellle Rottman also agreed with his sentiments.

“Junior was a great win for the program, and once again we had great play by Nikki Hess,” Wallace said. "Kirsten Mead, our freshman center, was great, Katie Edwards and Natasha Callens had phenomenal matches." Sunday, however, proved to be just more of a challenge. The Broncos traveled straight to BYU with a seven-hour layover after their stint in San Diego, with barely 24 hours to recover and prepare for Sunday’s game.

Squad travels to two difficult conference matchups on the road

The Broncos lost all three sets 25-10, 25-16 and 25-16. Here was once again crucial, leading the team with 11 kills. Mead was a notable player yet again, with 25 assists and seven digs.

“The game against BYU was a little tough — they’re a really good team and it’s always hard to play in their gym,” she said. Santa Clara faces two conference opponents at home this week — University of Portland on Thursday and Gonzaga University on Friday.

Junior Daniellle Rottman also agreed with her sentiments.

“Junior was a great win for the program, and once again we had great play by Nikki Hess,” Wallace said. "Kirsten Mead, our freshman center, was great, Katie Edwards and Natasha Callens had phenomenal matches." Sunday, however, proved to be just more of a challenge. The Broncos traveled straight to BYU with a seven-hour layover after their stint in San Diego, with barely 24 hours to recover and prepare for Sunday’s game.

Must See: Women's Volleyball

Portland vs. SC

6:00 p.m. Thursday, October 9 at Leavey Center

For a complete schedule of games, see page 7.

Tyler Scott

Giants Move On in October

Nobody thought the San Francisco Giants would win their Division Series matchup against the Washington Nationals. By nobody, I mean the “experts.” ESPN predictions almost unanimously favored the Nationals to win the series, even after the Giants’ Game 1 win.

Washington had the best record in the National League coming into the series against San Francisco at 96-66. Despite having the record and the expert picks, they fell to the Giants’ postseason magic.

The Giants took the Nats out in four games, 3-1, in the best-of-five series. San Francisco took Game 1 behind Jake Peavy’s first postseason win in a spectacular performance. He carried the Giants into the fifth inning before being pulled.

Brandon Belt was the hero of Game 2 with a home run in the 18th inning, showing the team’s grit and determination in the playoffs. The Giants just refused to give up, and that is why they’ve won two World Series in four years.

Washington stayed alive, winning Game 3 because of Doug Fister’s seven shutout innings. Bryce Harper sealed the win with a homer in the ninth and Suddenly, Giants’ fans were starting to sweat.

But in Game 4, the Giants showed the same toughness that delivered two World Series to the Bay Area. The Giants went up 2-0 in the second inning but the Nationals came roaring back in the fifth and seventh innings to tie the game. Orange and black fans were starting to sweat again; the powder was starting to get low. And won the next three 25-19, 25-23 and 25-23 again.

Head Coach Jon Wallace was pleased with Saturday’s outcome and noted the significance of an away victory.

“The game against BYU was a little tough — they’re a really good team and it’s always hard to play in their gym,” he said. Santa Clara faces two conference opponents at home this week — University of Portland on Thursday and Gonzaga University on Friday.

Junior forward Alfred “Ali” Edmonds gathers the ball against the University of San Diego. The Broncos would go on to lose 2-1 in their game versus the Toreros on Sunday after tying the third place Loyola Marymount Lions 1-1 on Friday.

ESPN and Bleacher Report’s “expert” website before the series, including "experts". Nobody, I mean the “experts.”

Junior Daniellle Rottman also agreed with his sentiments.

“Junior was a great win for the program, and once again we had great play by Nikki Hess,” Wallace said. "Kirsten Mead, our freshman center, was great, Katie Edwards and Natasha Callens had phenomenal matches." Sunday, however, proved to be just more of a challenge. The Broncos traveled straight to BYU with a seven-hour layover after their stint in San Diego, with barely 24 hours to recover and prepare for Sunday’s game.